

Licensed Vocational Nurse

Fundamentals of nursing courses with actual patient and hospital experience begin in the first semester. Student nurses practice at hospitals all over the San Gabriel Valley.

The licensed vocational nurse (LVN), an important member of the medical team, generally works in acute and long-term care facilities. Vocational nurses may also work in clinics; be employed as utilization reviewers who evaluate medical records in hospitals and doctors' offices; and participate in many other health-related areas.

Qualified applicants are selected to enter the program based on objective testing conducted throughout the Introduction to Health Occupations 100 course.

The LVN program does not maintain a waiting list. Selected students and alternates are required by the Health Sciences Department to:

- Attend the orientation screening for qualified applicants
- Complete a physical examination, required immunizations and CPR certification
- Show proof of student malpractice insurance
- Have all foreign transcripts translated into English and evaluated for equivalency (equal to 12th grade in the U.S.A.).

- Associate in Science degree
- Transferable
Transferable classes will vary from university to university and from one nursing program to another. Please see a counselor to verify the classes that will transfer to the college of your choice.
