What were you doing when you were 12 years old? Alec Loorz was sending an application to Al Gore to become a trained presenter after viewing An Inconvenient Truth. Since then, Alec has founded a non-profit organization called Kids vs. Global Warming.

Alec is now 16 and has travelled all over the world, presenting his vision and motivating young people to take care of their environment.

He talks about small things...carrying a reusable beverage container and hanging clothes rather than using the dryer.

He talks about large things...activating youth and influencing legislation that impacts the environment.

"Sustainability is living as if the future matters," says Alec Loorz.

Alec will speak at Citrus College for an early Earth Day event on March 9 at 11:30

in the Haugh Performing Arts Center.

He is planning a global "million youth march" to raise the voices of young people on the issue of climate change with the iMatter March, Mother's Day 2011.

Students, faculty, staff, and the community are all invited to attend. Join us to hear this amazing young leader share his message!
