

CITRUS COLLEGE DUBLIN

FACULTY

Theresa Villeneuve was tenured at Los Angeles Trade Technical College teaching journalism before leaving to join Citrus in 2000. Her degrees (a BA in film from UC, Santa Barbara and an MA from the University of Colorado, Boulder) make her a bit of a unicorn on campus since she teaches in two divisions, Communications and Fine Arts. In her free time she is a contributing writer for the website “The Gadgeteer,” which combines her hobbies of trying out new technology and writing about it. Other hobbies include appearing on game shows and no-limit Texas hold’em, and of course, travel. She is a firm believer in the value of study abroad, having lived abroad herself in Norway while in college and later as part of the London and Kyoto programs.

Gerhard Peters teaches Political Science and joined the faculty at Citrus College in 2007. His teaching experience includes courses on International Relations, Comparative Politics, and American Government. As a seasoned traveler having visited over 60 countries, he has experience teaching abroad in the London and Spain programs. His professional work as the Co-director of the American Presidency Project at UC Santa Barbara has been nationally recognized. Professor Peters is excited to assist students in the Dublin program by bringing Ireland's unique position in the European Union and relationship with the United Kingdom to the classroom.
